(Source: http://www.scrabble-assoc-usa.org/speller_b_20_1_91_p->->2) __NOEDITSECTION__ Any of the 13 long vowels or diphthongs may be replaced by any of the 13 corresponding short vowels or diphthongs. This is not taken into account in dictionaries, which all have one entry per word. However, it can affect pronunciation and occasionally spelling. In most cases, the choice is between clear and dark vowel sounds.

a = This sound is found in the pair "caught"-"cot" and can be written with either "a" or "o". A third form, the diphthong , is found in words like "caught", which cannot be written with just one of these letters. See #Other special cases below. Other examples are:

- a = The combination "ough" can represent different sounds depending on its placement within a word. In the word "slough," it represents the vowel sound . In the word "thought," however, it represents a completely different vowel sound . As a result, it should not be considered a letter of the alphabet on its own.
