Stereotactic treatment for brain metastases: a comparison of automated and manual techniques. The authors investigated the safety and efficacy of a newly automated stereotactic system that is intended to increase the number of patients eligible for intracranial radiosurgery. A total of 116 patients with brain metastases were treated with a stereotactic robot (CyberKnife, Accuray Inc, Sunnyvale, CA). The system uses an intraoperative acquisition with the patient in the treatment position, followed by a planning phase during which the resection cavity is defined. A planning target volume (PTV) and a set of OARs were selected. Clinical target volume (CTV) planning was not required, because in all cases the PTV was selected so as to encompass the entire gross tumor. With CyberKnife, the following manual and automated techniques were used: (1) frame-based stereotactic radiosurgery with volumetric modulated arc therapy, (2) frameless radiosurgery with volumetric modulated arc therapy, and (3) robotic radiosurgery with multi-leaf collimators. With manual techniques, stereotactic plans were developed in a planning workstation that 2d92ce491b
