Ultrastructure of the olfactory bulb in the eel, Anguilla anguilla L.: two subcompartments of the glomerular zone. The present study deals with the fine structure of the olfactory bulb in eels, Anguilla anguilla L. (Mammalia, Teleostei), using both light and transmission electron microscopy. Two subcompartments of the glomerular zone, a ventral (ventral olfactory tubercle) and a dorsal one (dorsal olfactory tubercle), are distinguished, corresponding to the telencephalic vesicles mentioned earlier. In both subcompartments the olfactory nerve leaves the bulb through three olfactory nerves, three glomeruli and one anterior perforated zone. The vesicular glomeruli are arranged in one or two series, alternating with the cells of the subpallial cortex, ventrally, and with the calyx of Ammocoetes. The olfactory nerve of the vesicular glomeruli originates from the olfactory nerve of the subpallial cortex and is confined in the vascular periventricular space. The cells of the subpallial cortex are short dendrites which receive mainly afferents from the vesicular glomeruli. The following features are specific to the ventral subpallial cortex: a) its efferents, starting from the olfactory nerve and ending in the vesicular glomeruli, are mainly associated with the mitochondria, b) the axon terminals of the cells of the subpallial cortex are numerous, having in their perikarya numerous secretory granules and coarse vesicles, c) the cells of the subpallial cortex are richly provided with intercellular contacts,
