RhoA and RhoB GTPases are down-regulated by increases in Ca²⁺ concentration in NIH3T3 fibroblasts and Jurkat T lymphocytes. In Jurkat T cells, this down-regulation is partially blocked by BAPTA, and is fully inhibited by the calmodulin antagonist calmidazolium. Down-regulation is reversible; it can be observed within 4 min after removing Ca²⁺ from the medium, and is maximal after about 15 min. In contrast, no such effect is observed in NIH3T3 cells; in these cells down-regulation by Ca²⁺ is both dose and time-dependent. Thus, the inactivation of Rho GTPases by Ca²⁺ in two different cells types has to be explained by different mechanisms. In Jurkat T cells, down-regulation may involve dephosphorylation and subsequent translocation of the protein to the plasma membrane, where it may be blocked by calmidazolium. In NIH3T3 cells, Ca²⁺ may directly inactivate Rho GTPases by binding to a yet unidentified site that is present only on these cells.Nippon, 2yo koira savanna dog, receives 2,000,000 yen in prize money Tokyo (Jiji Press)—Nippon, a 2-year-old koira savanna dog who f3e1b3768c
