Raging Phoenix. 6.0. Raging Phoenix, you ain't seen nothing yet: the surrounding storyline in this film is amateurish in the extreme, a kind of riff on. Magnetic resonance angiography: a new diagnostic technique in aneurysmal subarachnoid hemorrhage. Magnetic resonance angiography is a new, noninvasive technique for investigating the cerebral vasculature. In this study, we evaluated the sensitivity and specificity of magnetic resonance angiography in the diagnostic assessment of patients with aneurysmal subarachnoid hemorrhage. Twenty-one patients with subarachnoid hemorrhage (n = 21; mean age, 57 years +/- 6.2; range, 36 to 79) and 20 volunteers (n = 20; mean age, 44 years +/- 13; range, 21 to 77) were examined using magnetic resonance angiography. Magnetic resonance angiography was performed on a 0.5-Tesla whole-body system with a phased-array head coil. The common carotid artery, basilar artery, anterior cerebral artery, and middle cerebral artery were evaluated. Magnetic resonance angiography was concordant with conventional catheter angiography in 21 of 21 patients with subarachnoid hemorrhage. Magnetic resonance angiography revealed a 12 mm asymptomatic intracranial aneurysm in one patient. In patients with subarachnoid hemorrhage, magnetic resonance angiography revealed abnormal findings in 8 of 10 patients with associated cerebral infarction. Magnetic resonance angiography identified a 15-mm aneurysm in one of these patients. Magnetic resonance angiography revealed an additional aneurysm in the distal basilar artery of a patient with subarachnoid hemorrhage. Magnetic resonance angiography failed to demonstrate the left carotid siphon in a patient with cerebral angiography. Magnetic resonance angiography is a fast and accurate technique for the assessment of cerebral vasculature. Magnetic resonance angiography is a promising diagnostic tool for evaluating the cerebral vasculature in patients with subarachnoid hemorrhage. A man was arrested Thursday after allegedly pointing a firearm at a San Jose State University student on the San Jose State University campus. University police responded to the incident at approximately 11:55 a.m. in the area of East San Salvador Road and Sutherland Avenue, according to a university press release.
