In recent years, the desirability of enhancing occupant protection in the event of a side collision has been increasingly highlighted. However, the conventional side airbag system for protecting the occupant in the event of a side collision is designed such that it is deployed when a door is closed, thereby allowing only a slight time for an occupant to get out of the vehicle or to take any action. This may cause the occupant to suffer from greater injuries. It is an object of the present invention to provide a side airbag system which can safely protect an occupant even when the vehicle is involved in a side collision. The side airbag system according to the present invention comprises an airbag that is disposed in a vehicle side wall portion and adapted to inflate in the event of a side collision, a seat having a seatbelt guide portion adapted to guide a seatbelt for restraining an occupant, and an airbag cover mounted on the vehicle side wall portion so as to open and close an opening formed in the vehicle side wall portion. The airbag cover has a peripheral wall defining a top-side opening and a bottom-side opening, and a floor panel mounted on the peripheral wall of the airbag cover such that the opening of the airbag cover is opened and closed by the floor panel. The floor panel is formed with a recess, and the airbag is provided with a pressure port that communicates with the recess and adapted to inflate and allow the pressure port to open when the airbag cover is opened. In a front side collision, the pressure port is communicated with the inside of the vehicle, and in a rear side collision, the pressure port is communicated with the outside of the vehicle
