Solve a problem from a textbook on the whiteboard, then create it on your computer screen for a complete visualization of the solution. Simulate laboratory experiments or— he sighed, or use any of the other technologies for presenting your data that seem more promising to you. Now that you've learned the basics of data management and structuring, you'll need to learn how to extract useful information from your data. Don't let data become a burden. You need to be able to identify information that will help the company move towards achieving its goals.
