She was sunk in the Pacific Ocean on 8 July 1942 during World War II. History Uniform was built by Shipyard, Inc. of Wilmington, North Carolina. She was a stores ship. She was laid down on 3 October 1940 and launched on 28 November 1940. She was named for the uniform of the United States Navy, the dreaded khaki. She was commissioned on 12 April 1941. Service history Uniform served in the Pacific during World War II. On 28 May 1941, she steamed to the Virginia Capes for fueling. She transited the Panama Canal en route to San Francisco, California. On 6 June 1941, she departed San Francisco with and a troop convoy. The next day the convoy was attacked by Japanese aircraft. She was the second of the convoy to be hit. The next day she was hit by a bomb in the engine room. On the morning of the attack, she was at the stern of the convoy. About one hour after the attack, she left the convoy. On 7 June, she was ordered to shelter in the Tonga Islands due to the Japanese attack on the US naval base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. The following day, she steamed to Sydney, Australia, arriving on 12 June. She began unloading stores for the forces in the Pacific. On 8 July 1942, she was sunk by a Japanese submarine off New Britain, New Ireland, in the Pacific Ocean.
