7. [Change of energy metabolism parameters in the peritoneal fluid of women with normal and pathologic pregnancy, with and without abortion]. The energy metabolism parameters in the peritoneal fluid and blood were studied during the second and third trimester of normal and pathologic pregnancy, including spontaneous abortion. There were no changes in energy metabolism in the blood during spontaneous abortion. However there were decreased levels of energy metabolism in the peritoneal fluid during spontaneous abortion as compared to women who remained pregnant. Changes in the energy metabolism in the peritoneal fluid of women in the third trimester of normal pregnancy were more profound as compared to that of patients in the second trimester, particularly in cases of spontaneous abortion.

Q: Strange behaviour in C++ In a C++ project, i have a class that sets up a DirectSound buffer. The buffer is created in a function in the class, that initializes itself with my buffer parameters. Here is the code for the initializing function:

void CSound::init(_In_ const DWORD dsoverlay); #define NOERROR 0 HRESULT CSound::init(_In_ const DWORD dsoverlay) { if(FAILED(CoInitialize(NULL))) return NOERROR; if(FAILED(hwnd_handle = CreateWindow(wszWindowClassName, wszCaption, WS_OVERLAPPEDWINDOW, hwnd_desktop, -1, -1, 250, 0,
