Lipid storage and the formation of lipid droplets (LDs) are reduced by statin treatments. Since the reduced number of LDs is correlated with reduced protein kinase C (PKC)- δ expression in hepatocytes, we here examined whether the down-regulation of PKC- δ is responsible for the statin-induced reduction in LDs. Treatment of HepG2 cells with atorvastatin (ATV), the most potent and effective statin for reducing the accumulation of LDs, and with a known PKC- δ activator (i.e. LY294402), but not with other types of statins, selectively and dose-dependently reduced the number of LDs, even though ATV treatment did not affect the expression of the lipid transporter CD36. In addition, ATV treatment selectively decreased the expression of PKC- δ , but not that of PKC- α and PKC- ϵ . Furthermore, treatment with LY294402, but not with a non-PKC inhibitor, also reduced the number of LDs. These findings suggest that ATV selectively reduces the number of LDs in hepatocytes via a reduction in PKC- δ .Q: Passing multiple form elements through AJAX request I want to send a form with multiple elements.
