Primary stability of endosseous dental implants in extraction sockets: an in vitro study. The aim of this study was to compare primary stability (i.e. initial implant stability) between teeth with normal periodontal health (extracted socket, IS), teeth with periodontitis (non-extracted socket, IE), teeth without periodontal disease (control, CT), and a titanium rod (RO). Forty-eight human implants (Nobel Biocare) were used in this study. The implants were placed in each of the following four groups: IS, IE, CT, and RO. The initial implant stability was evaluated by resonance frequency analysis (RFA). The results showed that the mean values for IS were significantly higher than the mean values for IE (P 0.05), IE and RO (P > 0.05), and CT and RO (P > 0.05). The initial stability results of implants placed in extraction sockets was significantly higher than those in non-extraction sockets.
