Lateral nasal wall reconstruction involves the repair of the lateral nostril wall, which is a common source of complications. The commonest cause is injury of the perforating branch of the nasolacrimal duct. The perforating branch was mainly confined to the lateral nasal wall. However, reconstructive surgery should be carried out as extensively as possible in the nasal cavity for complete reconstruction. The authors advocate connecting the internal nasal septum with the lateral nasal wall. This provides a passageway from the anterior nasal cavity to the mouth. After resection of a tumor within the nasal cavity, the internal nasal septum is reconstructed and the osteocartilaginous portion is discarded. The mucosa of the internal nasal septum is then connected to the lateral nasal wall. This effectively restores both the anatomy and the function of the nose.V2 is the most-used version of the Memcript calendar app for iOS.
