I'll have to keep an eye on it. Thanks for letting us know about it. I think that's it pretty much sums it up. I had been keeping an eye on this app. Glad to hear that you like it. On the more technical side, there are a couple of things that are interesting. First, the widget is built using the Yahoo! Widget Engine. Second, I had to jump through some hoops to get the whole thing built. I first tried just embedding the RSS feed into the existing page. I didn't want to block the RSS feed that the browser was using. So I created a new page in IIS. The page did exactly the same thing that the original page did, with the only exception being that it used the new RSS feed. But the RSS feed was still present in the original page, and I just had to figure out a way to get the other "parts" of the widget to notice the RSS feed was gone. Finally, I found a way to get Yahoo! to publish the RSS feed as the "current" page. That is, a page that will "always show up first." In addition, it will "auto-refresh," if you know what I mean. All of these things can be built in the configuration.php file. If you go to the Yahoo! Widget Engine User's Guide, you can find some great documentation. In fact, it's better than the Yahoo! Widget Engine Documentation
