Abstract
Introduction: The distinct structure of the hippocampus makes it susceptible to multiple disorders, such as traumatic brain injury (TBI) or neurodegenerative disease. In this study, we examine the mechanisms underlying hippocampus-mediated behavioral outcomes following TBI. Methods: We used two inbred mouse strains (FVB/NJ, C57BL/6J), which differ in their thalamic innervation pattern and hippocampal-dependent behavior. After post-injury rehabilitation, mice were tested in the elevated plus maze (EPM) and novel object recognition (NOR) test in the rotarod test and in the open field test (OFT). To determine the effect of thalamic innervation, we transplanted embryonic thalamus of the FVB/NJ into C57BL/6J mouse, receiving a mouse model for dysmnnesia (TBI) in this study. Results: The level of thalamic innervation has significant effects on the performance in the EPM. In contrast, the levels of thalamic innervation did not affect the performance in the NOR and rotarod tests. Furthermore, we found that hippocampal innervation by cortical neurons has an important role in spatial learning and memory in the OFT. Conclusion: We successfully established a model of dysmnnesia and were able to explain the role of both thalamic and hippocampal innervation in the hippocampus-dependent behavior. We suggest that the distinct neuronal structures regulating the

The present invention relates to a method and apparatus for regulating the airflow of a toilet bowl. More particularly, the invention relates to a method and apparatus for regulating the airflow of a toilet bowl using a hand-operated damper that is adjustable to maintain the air flow as necessary to facilitate urination in order to help prevent blockage of the bowl. The maintenance of a satisfactory flow of air through a toilet bowl is important for proper elimination and hygiene. It is not uncommon for the obstruction of a toilet bowl caused by a blockage of the drain line or the valve or the mixing of fecal material with urine, or the excess buildup of fecal material in the bowl to inhibit the flow of air through the drain system. Such blockages can be caused by silt, hair, skin, toilet paper, or other debris. In the event of a blockage, a clogged toilet bowl may cause an unpleasant and messy situation. Thus, a need exists for an apparatus and method for regulating the flow of air through a toilet bowl in order to facilitate urination. I purchased a used Nikon D7100 with 18-55 VR and 50mm f1.8. I'm having a difficult time with some of the lighting and low light situations. I would like to purchase some high quality flash that would be more effective than the built in flash. Does anyone have any recommendations for a high quality flash? Nikon D7100, 18-55mm 77a5ca646e
