he asks, prompting a flood of foul language from the child. Later in the film, Mr. Garrison's weakness and misunderstanding of the principles of upbringing... ----- I see this film as an attempt to address the problem of fathers and children. The father tries to understand, but often his actions are rather negative. He does not want to understand his son, he does not want to accept him. Doesn't want to. Doesn't want to. Doesn't want to. But is there even time to receive? Is it possible to change something if you don't want to change yourself? Or is all that we can do in such a situation is to try to understand each other, if it doesn't work out, accept everything as it is and live on without burning bridges?
