Dassault Aviation Ltd. is a manufacturer of civilian and military aircraft and a manufacturer of the Rafale combat aircraft. The company traces its origins to the 1912-founded Société des Anciens Avions de Construction et d'Etudes, which was instrumental in the creation of the Blériot aircraft. The Blériot-SPAD aviation company was named Dassault-SPAD in honor of its founding members, Louis Blériot and Émile SPAD. The company is headquartered at Croissy, France and has bases in France, Germany, the United Kingdom, the United States, Russia, and Australia. Its subsidiaries include Dassault Systèmes, a global company with military-related products and services in defense, aerospace, engineering, and enterprise. Overview Dassault Aviation is a manufacturer of Rafale combat aircraft, an airplane that has entered service with the French Air Force. According to the company, in 2018, it sold 500 Rafales and is in line for a contract with India for the manufacture of 100 of the planes. In addition, it is working with France on the Rafale multirole fighter jet for Saudi Arabia, as well as the Rafale multirole fighter jet for Morocco. The company was formerly known as Dassault Aviation. In March 2004, following a string of incidents, the company was renamed Dassault Aviation – Dassault Systèmes, and the company logo was changed. In July 2005, the company opened a manufacturing facility in Chengdu, China. In 2010, Dassault announced that they had invested $300 million into the facility. As of 2017, the manufacturing facility employs more than 6,000 people. In February 2018, the company announced that it was investing more than $2 billion into the facility, expanding the capacity from 7.3 to 12 million planes per year. It is set to achieve full capacity in 2019. History 1910-1912: Aviation beginnings The French government formed a committee, which included Émile Védrières, the head of the Anciens Avions de Construction et d'Etudes, to investigate the possibility of building airplanes.
