A parking brake is a brake that can prevent the vehicle from moving when the vehicle is parked on a slope or the like. A typical parking brake includes a spring force that generates a force that returns the parking brake to a released position when the vehicle is released from the parked position, so that the vehicle can move in response to an external force (e.g., a force from a driver of the vehicle) that is applied to the vehicle. The parking brake may be actuated by pressing an actuation member so as to move the parking brake from the released position to the locked position to hold the vehicle stationary. Japanese Patent Application Publication No. 2003-252052 discloses a parking brake that is configured to allow a vehicle occupant to easily lock or unlock the parking brake by operating an operation member. The parking brake includes a spring force that generates a force that returns the parking brake to a released position when the vehicle is released from a parked position, and a lock/unlock member that is coupled to the operation member to transmit a rotation of the operation member to the parking brake. The lock/unlock member includes first and second disk members, and a movable member that is coupled to the first and second disk members. The first and second disk members are rotatably coupled to each other via the movable member to transmit a rotation of the operation member to the parking brake. The movable member includes a claw. When the operation member is operated, the claw engages and disengages the first and second disk members so as to move the first and second disk members away from each other. In this example, the parking brake is moved to the released position when the first and second disk members are spaced apart from each other, and the parking brake is moved to the locked position when the first and second disk members are brought into contact with each other. In the parking brake disclosed in JP 2003-252052, when the first and second disk members are spaced apart from each other, the parking brake is in the released position. On the other hand, when the first and second disk members are brought into contact with each other, the parking brake is in the locked position. In this respect, it is desirable that the amount of rotation of the operation member to move the parking brake from the released position to the locked position
