One problem often associated with the use of such barricades is that their use and the movement of the workers with the barricades, and the vehicles carrying the workers, and other construction equipment, block the construction area. This creates a backlog of work as the workers wait for the area to be cleared before they can continue work. Another problem with the use of barricades is that the presence of such barricades increases the risk that a worker will be injured or killed by falling objects such as bits of concrete or other building materials. Another problem associated with the use of barricades is that if the barricades are not properly secured to the building, they can be dislodged or become unsecured to the building, causing additional problems.
