Field of the Disclosure The present disclosure relates generally to communication devices that conduct electrical signals over a wireless communication system, and more particularly, to multi-functional communication devices that can conduct wireless communication signals, such as cellular phone signals, across different wireless communication systems to allow a user to conduct both voice and data communication using a single communication device. Background of the Disclosure As the world becomes increasingly mobile, individuals use various communication devices, such as cellular phones, personal digital assistants, computer tablets, and the like, to facilitate voice, text, audio, and video communications. Some communication devices, commonly referred to as "multi-functional communication devices," can be configured to function as more than one type of communication device. For example, the communication device may be configured to operate as a personal computer (e.g., via a data connection), as a cellular telephone (e.g., via a wireless cellular telephone link), as a radio (e.g., for receiving and transmitting radio frequency communication signals, such as Wi-Fi™ signals), and the like. As another example, communication devices may include multiple portions configured to different operational modes. For example, separate portions of the communication device may be configured to cellular telephone and personal computer modes. Operating a communication device as a single mode communication device that only functions within a single wireless communication system may reduce operational efficiency and convenience for a user of the communication device. In particular, if the user of a communication device is conducting a voice conversation in a wireless communication system while the communication device is transmitting data in another wireless communication system, the user may no longer be able to continue the voice call, thus forcing the user to transfer the voice call over the other wireless communication system. Moreover, a single mode communication device may become outdated or non-functional if it is transferred to a different wireless communication system. For example, if the communication device is a cellular telephone, the cellular telephone may become outdated if it is transferred to a GSM network since the GSM communication system is no longer in use. Transferring the communication device from a first wireless communication system to a second wireless communication system may be cumbersome and cumbersome for a user since the user may be required to carry two communication devices to facilitate wireless communication. Accordingly, there is a need for multi-functional communication devices that can provide multiple forms of communication services, such as cellular telephone services, via different types of wireless communication systems. There is also a need for multi-functional communication devices that are configured to provide seamless connectivity between NASA's Juno spacecraft has now passed a thousand days in flight and has arrived at Jupiter, offering up new details about the giant gas-giant planet, and it doesn't look like things are slowing down. The Juno mission's trajectory has brought the craft into orbit around Jupiter in late August, and since then, the spacecraft has been beaming back exciting images of the planet and its most famous features, such as its Great Red Spot and amazing swirling bands of clouds. "The Juno mission's Jupiter orbit insertion brings us to this moment, where I can almost touch it," NASA's Juno project scientist Scott Bolton told the UK's Telegraph. "It's going to be a real privilege to go further in." The high-resolution images shot by Juno's main imaging system, JunoCam, have revealed the true diversity of Jupiter's cloud bands. ALSO ON HUFFPOST: Scientists Believe the Waves Coming from the North Pole of Jupiter's Moon, Ganymede, Are Tidal Waves Jupiter's Great Red Spot Has Stretched to 4,000-Miles across the Planet's Equator, NASA Finds As Juno Touchdown Nears, Scientists Try To Predict What It Will Find Juno is scheduled to remain in orbit for about 10 months, coming within 9,000 miles of the planet's cloud tops and performing a series of scientific observations.
