Testimony of Bill K. Walton, President, Surface Transportation Policy Partnership On December 15, 2010, the Surface Transportation Policy Partnership testified before the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee Subcommittee on Railroads, Pipelines and Hazardous Materials. In our testimony, we called for amendments to permanently protect the Agua Hedionda Lagoon and Keweenaw Bay in Michigan. Subcommittee Chairman Jay Rockefeller (D-W.Va.) and Ranking Member John Thune (R-S.D.) listened to more than two hours of testimony from elected officials, commercial and public interests, and conservation organizations. Like other state and local governments, Cuyahoga County has faced significant challenges with stormwater pollution from development-related runoff from the Keweenaw Peninsula. Under current state law, the Keweenaw Waterway is subject to annual permitting requirements for new or expanded wastewater treatment facilities. Without these rules, developers could apply for permits to discharge more polluted stormwater into the Keweenaw Waterway, which would threaten water quality and the health of the Superior Harbor estuary. The rules governing the Keweenaw Waterway are under a congressional review and would be strengthened if the Clean Water Act is amended in the upcoming fiscal year. Cuyahoga County has worked to reduce stormwater pollution coming off of the Keweenaw Peninsula to the Larch Lake (Lake Superior) by implementing and enforcing stormwater drainage ordinances and land development controls. However, the lack of stormwater controls for the Keweenaw Peninsula encourages development at the same time that community efforts are working to reduce runoff. As a bipartisan organization of 12 state and local governments, transportation planners, engineers, and researchers, STPP strongly believes that the most cost-effective, collaborative, and sustainable stormwater management approach to the peninsula is through the use of constructed wetlands for infiltration of stormwater. We were pleased that the Subcommittee recognized the vital role of the US Army Corps of Engineers to develop infrastructure to protect our water quality and protect our water resources. The subcommittee heard testimony from three groups: the US Army Corps of Engineers, state and local governments, and a cross-section 648931e174
