Adobe's Photoshop has a large and active community of Photoshop and graphic design experts. You can connect to this group via Facebook: This tutorial will teach you how to bring a color photo into Photoshop and then manipulate the colors of individual areas of the photo using the Hue, Saturation, and Lightness tools. Before we get started: You can use the various Photoshop tutorials and plug-ins available for free online to accomplish all of these steps in Photoshop. However, if you are short on time, I find that the UserGuide tutorials by Adobe are extremely helpful. You can download them for free and they'll walk you through the basic steps of a project. The Photoshop interface is very straightforward. The top bar has the main window and its various tools. Below the bar are a series of buttons that are the real power of Photoshop. They generally correspond to actions that you can apply to selected layers, such as: move, resize, fill, etc. These buttons are what make Photoshop so powerful. Step 1: Create a New Photoshop Project It's important to note that Photoshop has a number of different types of projects it can contain: documents, workspaces, thumbnails, web pages, images, etc. The default type of project in Photoshop is the document and it's common for beginners to start their projects this way. Every document in Photoshop, regardless of type, is an image that is saved as a file. Photoshop can be used to edit and alter this image in any way it sees fit. In this project, we'll be creating a new document containing a single image. We will then bring in an existing photo to serve as the subject of the new image. When you start a new Photoshop document (File -> New from File), you'll be prompted to choose where to save the new document, as well as the dimensions of the new image. Choose the default and Photoshop will save a copy of the new image in your new document. Select the new document and then click anywhere on the canvas to create a new image. A new window will open with the current selection as the active canvas. You can zoom or fit the current document to any size and shape you wish before starting your work. We'll leave the document at the default size of 1280 x 720 pixels but you can choose any other size if you wish. Step 2: Importing Your Photo It's important to note that your photo will be placed on a

When Brian “Big Rig” Truax and his wife went to the grocery store a few weeks ago, a box of mincemeat fell out of a cart. “Did you get me a present?!” Susan asked her husband, a retired army command sergeant major. “No,” Brian replied. “That’s the third time this week,” she said. Advertisement The couple laughed and kept on shopping. But Thursday, they stopped shopping at one of two grocery stores in Kenosha, Wisconsin, because they found it impossible to buy a mid-priced New York style sausage. The couple was also surprised to find out it was TGS — The Girl Scout's — cookie season and that most stores were sold out of New York style sausage. "That's what I call the big rig effect," said Brian Truax, 51, of Kenosha. "When you have a big rig pull up, that box of cookies comes out." This is the third year of TGS cookie season and it's hard to find it, said Valerie Ebenhoch, marketing and events manager at Girl Scouts of the Tri-State Council. "In years past," she said, "it was always easy to get it." Ebenhoch said she's not sure why the problem has arisen. "I don't think we've found the root of the issue yet," she said. "We're still collecting data." Last year's cookie season was deemed a success as stores sold more than 2.5 million boxes of cookies, she said. But other types of cookies are popular as well and some consumers may be buying more than one box to stock up on other types, Ebenhoch said. Because of the popularity of the TGS cookie, Ebenhoch said, it has overshadowed Girl Scouts of the Carolinas and Georgia — called Girl Scouts of the Carolinas and Georgia. "As a result of that increased popularity," she said, "we are having less of an issue there." She said Girl Scouts of the Carolinas and Georgia sold about 2 million boxes of cookies in 2013. While
