I currently have an Activity which displays a ListView using a FirebaseRecyclerAdapter. Each item in the adapter has a button (in another activity) which should perform some action which the adapter would not be able to do itself. To do so, I'm using an OnClickListener to perform a callback when the user clicks on the button. The problem is that in order to actually perform the callback, I need to store some data in SharedPreferences. This is my first time working with SharedPreferences so I'm not exactly sure what to do. I tried creating a custom FirebaseRecyclerAdapter class, and then in that class use a onBindViewHolder method where I put code to manipulate the shared preference key, but I wasn't able to, so I guess I'm doing something wrong. A: It is possible, but I don't see it as a good practice, what you can do in this case is create a class that implements a Callback interface and put it as a listener on a value in your Database and retrieve it when the UI should be updated. You can use the Firebase SDK to retrieve it by calling the call getValue() on your database node. If you set a listener to it you'll be able to retrieve it when needed. Q: Meteor method not working I am trying to call a Meteor method that takes a userId and sorts the posts by the last time it was commented. This is my method: Posts.find({user: this.userId}, {sort: {createdAt: -1}}, function(err, posts) { if (err) console.log(err); this.posts = posts; this.subscribe('posts', this.posts); }); My Meteor method

This app is optimized for the iPhone 5s, iPhone 5 and iPhone 5c., on one hand, that she failed to notify her attorney of a purported telephone conversation with defendant Goldberg after informing her attorney of a purported telephone conversation with defendant Goldberg's attorney (Defendant's Exs. C & D), and, on the other hand, that she thereafter gave false testimony at the trial (See Supplementary Exs. to Defendant's Mem. Opp'n to Pl.'s Mot. at 6, 4:22-5:1). That the *1143 Court finds this testimony credible is also supported by the testimony of another court reporter, who, on January 19, 2003, was at the Recorder's Office, Courtroom 30, at which the trial in the instant case was being held, and who overheard defendant Anastasio ask her supervisor whether she had ever received a message from defendant Goldberg's attorney informing her that defendant Goldberg had contacted her (See id. at 3-4).[7] The Court also finds that plaintiff has established by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant Anastasio's purported statements in Exhibit 23 were made to defendant Anastasio's supervisor during the noon recess of the trial, as she testified, and not, as she had testified, at a party where an unidentified person told her that someone had called defendant Goldberg's attorney and informed her of a telephone conversation between plaintiff and defendant Goldberg (See id. at 2-3). That the Court finds that this statement, as testified to by defendant Anastasio, is credible is further supported by the fact that defendant Anastasio's supervisor, Ms. Benson, was the only other person at the office during the noon recess, and that she denied having received such a message from the unidentified person (Id.). The Court finds that defendant Anastasio's purported statements in Exhibit 23 were made with the knowledge that her statement was false and that she knew the purported statements were not true. The Court also finds that defendant Anastasio's purported statements in Exhibit 23 were made to retaliate against plaintiff for her having brought a complaint with the EEOC (Id. at 1-2), for having testified against defendant Goldberg at her trial (Id. at 2),
