The second was that she was sleeping in a bed. As is not uncommon with babies, it took at least some time for her to learn how to sleep upright. (Had I not been so desperate for rest, I would have brought the dog in to sleep on the bed in order to allay the baby's fears.) But it was a long time before she could reliably be brought to sleep in her own bed. Related: Mommy, Where's Daddy? I had previously avoided the dreaded question of "how do I get my baby to sleep?" to myself, but I was pushed into the corner by my desire to secure a night of uninterrupted sleep. My desperation for sleep grew to such an extent that I started looking for workarounds for the problem. I would try to avoid putting the baby down at night and instead make it a rule that she would never be put down to sleep without a strict caveat that I wanted her to stay awake with me. I would then try to get the answer to the question "how do I get my baby to sleep?" on my own, and fail miserably. Puns are my jam. I love a good pun. "How do I get my baby to sleep?" I failed miserably. I wasn't so much interested in learning how to get my baby to sleep, but in the method of choice that other parents used to achieve such a feat. It is a technique that I will highlight here, as it's one that hasn't come up very much in parenting discussions, and even if it has, I haven't quite been able to figure out how to implement it into my life without everyone calling me out on my own tactics. I like puns. A pun is a play on words, but it can also be a way to describe something related to a greater detail, as in "I want to sleep, but my baby won't" or "Mommy can't sleep, so she wants to share her blankets with you." I had always assumed that the title of this particular article fell in line with the latter example, that I wanted the baby to sleep but I didn't. 388ed7b0c7

Mukesh Ambani, chairman of Reliance Industries and the richest Indian, has for weeks been silent on Delhi's controversial new legislation allowing a Muslim woman to divorce her husband by instant text, email, video or telephone call. Instead he has been blasting the fallout of the new law on relations between India's Catholic and Protestant communities. Religious groups argue that the decision to let Muslim women divorce by text or video message is tantamount to "forced conversion" because the widespread use of mobile phones means that no-one but the husband and wife will actually have to meet in person. Church leaders say thousands of Christian and Hindu families have already been ostracised and have given up their faith as a result. The Indian state of Goa, where 54% of the population is Christian, has been battling to halt the introduction of the legislation. Two Catholic church leaders have been arrested. Ambani, who is seeking to replace India's prime minister as the largest shareholder in Reliance Industries, has pledged to donate thousands of rupees (€9,000) for any act of "genuine Christian or Hindu conversion" in Goa. "I will leave Goa with a gift to the Catholic church of Rs 2 million to help the poorest of the poor to get the most basic things needed in life," Ambani is reported to have told Goa's police chief on Monday. He claimed the law was similar to the Islamic Sharia procedure by which Muslims can divorce by text. "The legal system of the people of Goa should not be dominated by aggressive priests," Ambani said. The Hindu-majority state is governed by a coalition of rightwing parties and the Catholic church. A three-judge constitutional bench is currently hearing a petition against the law, and it is expected to rule next month. The newly drafted law, known as the Goa Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Bill, allows divorce by video or text message, depending on the circumstances. It removes the requirement for the wife to have to be physically present if a husband accuses her of infidelity. In many cases women are also not required to return to their husband's home if he divorces her and the family's reputation is damaged. During her divorce hearing, the woman's in-laws, including her father and brother, are often not allowed to sit in the same room as the woman because the decree is considered "private".
