chess, actually achieves its objectives by the game of chess. In the game of chess, both the white and black players make the same movements of the four chessmen which are in play, as well as the same number of moves, each move being in the form of a square on the checkerboard. It is this similarity which provides the object of the game of chess. In fact, the game of chess has also been played on a checkerboard without the board, a game known as "chaturanga", though it is still played and won by the same number of moves of the players. The game has also been known through the centuries as black and white, though it is more commonly called checkers. This type of game is also known as a "board game" instead of a "chess game" for a simple reason. Though the game resembles in the moves and moves taken a game of chess, the game is actually a game of checkers. In fact, very good checker players never venture beyond the familiar four colors of checker

The Tennessean Shaquan Andrews is a student at Johnson City High School, where he is an honor student. He is also a member of the National Honor Society. He is also a student journalist for the News Sentinel and The Tennessean, where he writes for the magazine. He was recently honored to have his school project read by renowned children's book author, J.K. Rowling. Here's the story, as told to the Tennessean: JR: What have you been working on? SA: I've been working on a project for English. One of the things I've been trying to do is analyze a book. The book I've been analyzing is "The Snowman," by Anna Sosenko. JR: That was nominated for the National Book Award. SA: I think it was nominated for both a Newbery award and a Carnegie medal. I'm not really sure. JR: That doesn't make a lot of sense, then. SA: You don't think so? JR: No. SA: I think most people don't. I think they're kind of unsure about what
