The effect of removing poly-N-acetyllactosamine glycan from glycoproteins on their susceptibility to digestion by peptide-N-glycosidase was examined. The digestion proceeded as previously reported for O-linked glycosylation deficient mutants. Removal of the poly-N-acetyllactosamine glycan increased the susceptibility to peptide-N-glycosidase F. The product sizes of the wild type HLA-A2.1 molecules were N, N and N with molecular masses of 37,000, 37,000 and 35,000, respectively. Glycan removal increased the molecular masses of the 37,000 and 35,000 products to 40,000 and 38,000, respectively, which indicates that the increased susceptibility to peptide-N-glycosidase F is due to the removal of the poly-N-acetyllactosamine glycan and that the poly-N-acetyllactosamine glycan would decrease the susceptibility of the HLA-A2.1 molecules. I have a grammar file that has a rule that will generate a particular type of parser. It has a -- as the first token so that the parser knows it's a comment. Next, I want to create another "parser" that takes that parser (the one that has the --) and does something with it. I thought I'd be able to simply create another file called "ParseWithA", but this doesn't work because the "--" is the first token, so it's treated as an error. So my question is, how do I set precedence so that the bison/flex file knows that it should parse the -- as if it was the first token in the file, instead of treating it as a file that might start with a --?
