Editing individual RGB images The most common use of Photoshop is to apply basic image editing to your RGB (red, green, and blue) images to correct color, smooth edges, and add shadows, highlights, and other effects. There is no limit to the number of layers you can overlay, which makes the process extremely simple. You create one layer for the image's background and use another for the image's main subject. Adjust the colors of the subject using one layer while leaving the image's background intact and exposing the layers underneath. You can also do this for multiple images simultaneously with the Layers tool (see Chapter 6 for more information on this tool), but the great thing about the GIMP (see Figure 1-9) is that you can use it for this task without having to open a separate image first. **Figure 1-9:** The GIMP enables you to use its Layers tool to change one image on top of another. Photoshop is well equipped for correcting color balance and saturation while still retaining detail. When you correct color, you want to leave details in tact as much as possible so you can easily edit it later. Check out the section in this chapter, "Adjusting color and saturation," for more information on this process.

Some Photoshop users have been sticking with Photoshop for years — as it's the go-to platform for all kinds of graphic, web and other design tasks. But Photoshop is starting to slow down, and a new software program for graphic design is taking over the internet. Photoshop is one of the most powerful, versatile, and complex graphics editing tools out there. But it's also not as intuitive as a lot of other software programs for graphics design. That's why people have been starting to embrace other graphic design programs — like Adobe Elements — instead. If you are looking for a new, free software that is easier to use and is faster than Photoshop, this article should help you decide. We'll take a look at 11 other software alternatives to Photoshop, and we'll recommend which of these software programs are best for beginners, graphic designers and web design professionals. Note: Adobe Photoshop is the name of the product. I have no relationship with the company. It is also known as simply Photoshop. Feeding of hyperlipidemic rats with vegetable oil does not prevent the sphingomyelin exchange in triglyceride-rich lipoproteins. To investigate whether alterations of the plasma sphingomyelin (SPM) content could contribute to atherogenesis in hyperlipidemic rats, feeding of these animals with vegetable oil was carried out for 3 weeks. Lipid classes and SPM were analyzed in the VLDL, LDL, and HDL fractions isolated from fasted animals fed either with normal diet or with hypercholesterolemic diet. To determine whether there is interconversion between the two types of lipoproteins and whether SPM can exchange with triglyceride core, a kinetic analysis of SPM transfer was performed during injection of [3H]palmitoyl-labeled VLDL of hyperlipidemic rats in vivo. Despite the rise in SPM content in the VLDL fraction associated with hypercholesterolemia, neither the proportion of VLDL lipid classes nor that of total plasma lipids were significantly altered. Moreover, there was no change in the SPM content of the three lipoprotein classes. Concerning the in vivo transfer of [3H]palmitoyl-labeled VLDL, the plasma SPM in hyperlipidemic animals was neither decreased nor increased after injection of labeled VLDL. Finally, it was demonstrated that in hyperlipidemic animals there is no interconversion between VLDL and LDL particles, and that the SPM content is not decreased in the HDL fraction. We conclude that in this model of hyperlipidemia, alterations of the plasma SPM level do not contribute to the hyperlipidemia-induced atherogenesis. Boeing plans to make its latest jetliner, the 787 Dreamliner, at a newly built factory in South Carolina, a company spokesman said on Friday. At a cost of about $100 million, the 6,000-seat factory, to be operated by Dreamlifter Aviation Systems, would be the largest Boeing factory south of Washington and a major economic development boon to a state in need of more jobs. It is to be the first commercial aircraft assembly line operated by Dreamlifter, a joint venture between Boeing and Alenia, the Italian industrial group. South Carolina had been vying with Pennsylvania for the new assembly line, with Boeing support. Alenia owns about 50 percent of Dreamlifter. It would be Boeing?
