Shooting the image Photographers usually shoot images in RAW format. RAW (or RAW) files allow much greater flexibility in editing than JPG (or JPEG) files. RAW files contain all the information for an image that most image editing software needs to reproduce the final image. The RAW file includes all the noise, flaws, and general artifacts associated with the image that have to be either manually eliminated or controlled with software.

I've been using the same profile for a year or so, and this morning I get ERC_Error - No data, even though I did have data in the same place the last time I used it. In fact, I have some exported photos and ERC_FB2 files still there in the folder. What's going on? Any ideas? This thread appeared as an edit to the post in the same area of the forum called "Capture Designer. Thanks for stopping by." However, I read it as a new thread with the title "Facing New Problems Using ERC." You were already there when this thread started, so you could have posted your comment in the right place. Thanks for your attention. I can tell you that just opening any ERC file is no fun. File settings are not being saved correctly. I have to go through and save each one. It is infuriating. I realize that this is much easier if the profile is applied to a sequence, but I am trying to use it without creating a sequence, which is proving to be quite frustrating. I have used Creator for many years, and I use ERC for older files that I need to edit or send to clients. I find that ERC now often errors on export. If you use Adobe Bridge, do you see the problem? The "select all" check box does NOT work. Does your workflow involve sending to a computer? Miguel de Ventaja Miguel de Ventaja is the Principal of Rupert University School of Law (RUSL).
