Q: if `getRating()` is not triggered, `getRatingChange()` is not triggered I have got an Android application with a rating Bar. If I start the application and only click on the rating Bar once - it works fine. If I change the rating and click again only on the rating Bar - my app goes in the background and after that, I have the first problem. I have no callbacks on the clicks. So I tried to create a simple loop for a callback after every user click, but this didn't work - neither with `setOnRatingChangedListener()` nor with `setOnRatingChangeListener()`. I think this is a problem of the Honeycomb version of Android, but I am not sure, and I know I cannot use `setRating()` directly to set a rating because Honeycomb includes the rating bar. What should I do? A: OK, I've found the problem. I had a method like this: `public void onRatingChange(View v, float rating)` And I changed it to: `public void onRatingChange(View v, float rating, boolean fromUser)` For completeness, here is the method documentation for the first version: and for the second version: To keep the error messages at a minimum, I'm sure that's what caused the problem, but I don't know exactly how. I hope this will help others. Thanks An alternative method for the enumeration of platelets. In this study we have examined the ideal method for the enumeration of platelets in blood samples. Using a panel of monoclonal antibodies, it was possible to demonstrate that the platelet count is dependent upon the antibody selected and, consequently, on the sensitivity of the method. By using staphylococcal protein A, free light chain in the washing solution and anti-light chain, it was possible to increase the sensitivity to at least twofold. Addition of two anti-platelet antibodies and the use of a suitable experimental design allowed the development of a flexible method that has the capacity to detect platelet counts of around $100 \times 10^3/\text{microliters}$. A-u-dacious! Ain't Nobody Got Time for That! "When you're starting, your clients are very picky and stingy about what they will purchase, but as you go along, they are very willing to invest in the process and are willing to invest in the product." – Eric Dawson My studio is very full! We have awesome teachers, and some of the best kids around. I love being able to help my kids so much in their martial arts journey, and they love being able to learn. But the scheduling issues sometimes get in the way of that. It's a tough thing to schedule time that really matters! So today I'm reaching out to my readers, and to my friends, to see if anyone wants to start their kids off right! We have awesome classes! All levels, a kid friendly environment, and an open and genuine sense of community. We have a bouncy house for the kids to hang out in, when they don't want to be practicing. There are inflatables, a yoga ball, a foam pit, a swing, a giant ball pit, a mini climbing wall. We have fitness equipment, a trampoline, a bouncy castle, a pickle ball, table tennis, ping pong, foosball, and we're adding in a BBQ as well! We have a brand new studio – WAY bigger than our old one! We are expanding, and now we can host birthday parties, play dates, or family nights as well. And our new extension will be finished before the end of June! There is no need for bullies and you get to kick them in the teeth! ...like this puppy: When you're "on", I get a headache, and when you're "off" I have a headache. The balance of goals and actions in a single plan is vital. The 5 People You Meet At Your First Martial Arts Studio... The "martial artist" Because we're kid-friendly, the studio can be hectic. We often have to stop class for a minute or two or we'll have a problem. But the kids tend to be so cute and smiley, that they keep us going – and they're so nice.
