(Photo: Photostock / Ilya Nayman) How would you like to walk up to the bank teller and discover that your social security number has been printed onto a prepaid Visa card? Could you detect the phony card just by perusing a row of phony Visa cards? Of course you could. Researchers at the U.S. Army Research Institute of Environmental Medicine, the United States Naval Medical Research Center, and Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, along with more than 200 scientists and engineers from over 100 organizations, have published an important scientific paper in this week's Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS) to demonstrate how powerfully the human brain can detect counterfeit products and detect fakes even when we are not consciously aware of it. The paper's authors, who studied 200 people in Israel, published in PNAS, are described as "cognitive anthropologists," which makes me think that their writings should probably be reviewed by an anthropologist to be sure that they are accurate and unbiased. (Photo: Photostock / Ilya Nayman) For this particular study, the researchers presented people with fake products, such as prepaid visa and credit cards, that looked exactly like the real thing — the same logo, brand, and everything else — except that all the personal information was either fake or different from the real thing. Then the researchers tracked brain activity as the people thought about the products, including whether they were real or fake. Afterward, they measured the accuracy of their judgments. If you look at the composite image at the top of this column, you can see what I mean. Look at the Visa logo. The information printed on that card looks exactly like that on real Visa cards. It even looks like real-looking numbers. Look at the court card, below. Even though the card's information does not look like a real court card, people are very good at detecting that it is a fake. You can see that people were able to detect fakes of Visa cards even if the cards looked exactly like the real thing — even if a person never had any previous experience with Visa cards. Now look at the fake versions of the court card. It looks exactly like a real court card, right down to the Aromatase inhibitors for treating breast cancer: focus on fulvestrant. The aromatase inhibitors (AIs) represent a class of drugs that have been shown to be highly effective as first- and second-line agents in breast cancer, producing a response rate of approximately 80% to 90% in hormone-receptor-positive postmenopausal patients. The development of AI resistance, leading to disease progression, is the single most important reason for the need to develop new agents, such as the novel steroidal compound fulvestrant (ICI 182,780). Fulvestrant inhibits the estrogen receptor (ER) and down-regulates the production of estrogen from androgen precursors by antagonizing the estrogen receptor. This review summarizes the pharmacology, current and future clinical uses, and future directions of the AIs in breast cancer, with emphasis on fulvestrant.Q: Skip first n rows of pandas dataframe for subsetting the dataframe I have a dataframe of such a format Index
