ArchModels Vol.Novel murine model of peripheral neuropathy with selectively impaired dorsal root axonal regeneration. The pro-regenerative neurotrophic factor neurturin has been shown to be upregulated in the damaged spinal cord of some experimental models of neuropathic injury. Here, we show that neurturin expression and adenosine receptors (AdoRs) in the intact dorsal root ganglion (DRG) are transiently increased early after peripheral nerve injury. Intact DRG neurons show robust AdoR-mediated neurturin-induced neuritogenesis, which was not observed in injured DRG neurons. The authors show that neurturin drives DRG neuritogenesis through AdoR-dependent activation of the ERK pathway and that neurturin is involved in DRG neuron reinnervation following axotomy. These findings provide support to explore neurturin therapy in peripheral neuropathies in humans.
