Neoadjuvant chemotherapy for locally advanced and inflammatory breast cancer. New developments in the management of early breast cancer continue to be reported in the literature. This is especially so for those patients with locally advanced or inflammatory breast cancer (LBIBC). Neoadjuvant chemotherapy improves the breast conservation rate in patients with LBIBC and should be considered as part of the initial management of these patients. In the present article, we describe our experiences with neoadjuvant chemotherapy and discuss the new developments in this area. Magnetic baroreceptor activation decreases the expression of neuronal nitric oxide synthase in the paraventricular nucleus. We investigated the effect of strong stimulation of the carotid sinus baroreceptors with nitroprusside to investigate whether the nitric oxide system plays a role in the transfer of the baroreceptor signal. Male rats were anesthetized with urethane (0.5 g/kg) and alpha-chloralose (40 mg/kg). The carotid sinus nerves were stimulated electrically for 10 minutes at 6 Hz, an intensity that almost completely inhibited the sinus baroreceptors at the end of this period, as judged by the decrease in heart rate. The animals were divided into three groups: control (no electrical stimulation,  $n = 8$ ), nitroprusside alone ( $n = 7$ ), and nitroprusside given in association with the baroreceptor stimulation ( $n = 7$ ). The animals in the last group were administered with 10 mg/kg of nitroprusside via the jugular vein and the carotid sinus nerves were stimulated during 10 minutes. Baroreceptor stimulation elicited a decrease in plasma renin activity by about 85% from the control levels.

Neuronal nitric oxide synthase protein expression in the paraventricular nucleus was decreased 30% in nitroprusside alone and 75% in the groups given baroreceptor stimulation (P Q: If  $x^{\wedge}$
