Stealthy is an extension that makes it possible for users to hide their geographic location from Google, a great tool that can be used to keep people from being tracked online. This extension was developed by David LeBlanc, who wanted to give his fellow internet users the chance to protect their privacy by hiding their location. Stealthy makes use of the Google API in order to get information regarding users' locations, and then uses this data to serve different IP addresses as a form of proxy, allowing users to browse the web in a way that is not being tracked by authorities and they are not being associated with a specific IP address. This extension can be downloaded from its official website, but it is better to use a mirror instead of the original site due to censorship issues, in addition to the fact that the update feature might not be available. The support of Stealthy for Mozilla Firefox (or any other Firefox browser) is based on regular updates, and a new version is released every one to two weeks. All you need to do in order to update the extension is click its icon in the browser's toolbar and visit the developer's page. Unlike some other extensions, the update process for Stealthy is free and does not require a fee to proceed with the update procedure. Afterwards, you should be able to use the extension in order to access websites while being virtually undetectable. Installation Unzipping and placing the downloaded archive on the website's extension folder will make the job very easy, and the installation is supported on Firefox (version 45.5 and higher) and SeaMonkey (version 3.5.6 and higher), with similar procedures being recommended for other browsers.
