The school is a major constituent of the University of Louisiana System and is a member of the Association of Public and Land-Grant Universities. History The University of Louisiana at Monroe was founded in 1900 as Louisiana State Normal School (LSNS) and was renamed Louisiana State University at Monroe in 1922. On July 1, 1996, the University of Louisiana System officially changed the school's name to the University of Louisiana at Monroe, in recognition of its significant impact on Monroe's economy. On July 1, 2015, the university became a member of the University of Louisiana System. In addition, the university added graduate programs in the fall semester of that year. In May 2016, the university announced plans to build an $80 million Science and Technology Center, which would be one of the largest in the state. The center was completed in the summer of 2018 and is used by more than 2,000 students in the school's College of Sciences and Mathematics. In April 2019, it was announced that the University of Louisiana at Monroe was among colleges selected for a trial of a pilot program to offer free tuition to students from families earning less than $45,000. Under the pilot, students would still have to pay tuition, but the amount paid to the school by the university would be waived. Academics The university offers associate degrees and bachelor's degrees through its nine colleges. The largest college is the College of Sciences and Mathematics, which has about 3,600 students. Research centers and institutes The school has several research centers and institutes. The Institutes of Technology and Agricultural Research help advance technology and agricultural processes in Louisiana. The Center for Tropical Agriculture and Forestry promotes food security and environmental sustainability, and provides research, training, extension, and outreach in agriculture and forestry. Organization and administration The university is led by a chancellor, who is elected by a vote of the members of the Board of Supervisors of the University of Louisiana System. The current chancellor is Michael E. Foti, Jr. Colleges The school has nine colleges, each of which is led by a dean, assisted by a vice president of academic affairs.
