I am finishing the fourth iteration of a repository and I am done rewriting the code in a way that uses Command Composition Pattern. Now is where I need some suggestions, where should the "sharing of source" be done? Requirements are: All code must be in one program and this program is small. Code is easy to read and understandable. All references should be within the code. So far I have been using just plain text files and these are ok, but I don't think they are the right way to go. I think that the problem is that I don't think in terms of a source code sharing paradigm. What I am looking for is a scheme of having a "source" which could be shared with other developers, allowing them to be able to get a complete picture of my program, have in situ access to all the code and to see what I am doing on the project. If there isn't a perfect
