Paul Hoang Online - Review Forums - Discussion Forums. Pdf Pdf) on Jul 22, 2008. This invention relates generally to electronic circuits, and more particularly, to an electronic circuit having a voltage controlled resistance temperature device (VCRT) formed of an amorphous semiconductor alloy. It is known to form an active semiconductor resistance device such as a resistance temperature device by lightly doping a semiconductor material with a dopant which is at least an n-type impurity. As a result, the active semiconductor resistance device behaves as a low resistance device at the normal operating temperature of the device and behaves as a high resistance device at a junction temperature. Recently, it has been proposed to form a resistance device from an amorphous semiconductor alloy which has metallic characteristics similar to those of metal thin films. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,397,873 issued to A. P. Silberberg, a diode having a thin active semiconductor alloy is disclosed. The diode is formed by depositing and patterning the active semiconductor alloy on a substrate. An etch front region is then formed along the boundaries of the diode using a wet etching process. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,574,493 issued to J. R. Davidson et al, a contact is defined between two layers of amorphous semiconductor alloy using conventional photolithography techniques. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,581,112 issued to J. D. Hurwitz et al, an arrangement is disclosed for laminating an amorphous semiconductor alloy onto a substrate. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,607,098 issued to T. Ohata et al, a transistor structure is disclosed which has a thin active semiconductor alloy layer defined on the bottom surface of a recess formed in a semiconductor substrate. The top surface of the active semiconductor alloy layer is covered by a semiconductor region. A gate electrode is disposed in electrical contact with the semiconductor region. In U.S. Pat. No. 4,603,112 issued to G. J. Williams, a thin film transistor (TFT) is disclosed which includes a pair of thin film semiconductor layers separated by an insulator layer. The thin film semiconductor layers are between 10.Å and 50.Å thick. A gate insulator layer and gate electrode are formed on the insulator layer. A 1cdb36666d

His research shows that students prefer the use of an interactive problem based learning scenario over a traditional lecture
