For example, I have a Product model which has an array of choices for attributes like color, gender, and sizes. Something like this: `$validator = Validator::make(Input::all(), ['attribute_name_1' =>'required', 'attribute_name_2' =>'required', 'attribute_name_3' =>'required', 'attribute_name_4' =>'required'])`; I would like to add a rule that validates these checkboxes if the are selected. How can I do this? A: I think this should do what you want: `$validator = Validator::make(Input::all(), ['attribute_name_1' =>'requiredexists:selectAttributeOptions,attribute_name_1', 'attribute_name_2' =>'requiredexists:selectAttributeOptions,attribute_name_2', 'attribute_name_3' =>'requiredexists:selectAttributeOptions,attribute_name_3', 'attribute_name_4' =>'requiredexists:selectAttributeOptions,attribute_name_4'])`; The syntax of the first line is a bit cumbersome but I think you'll understand. Basically it says for every attribute that you want to validate, make sure the value matches what exists in the selectAttributeOptions array. Explanation: We have Attribute name 1 Attribute

Mozilla's Firefox as a vehicle for Java and Flash on Mac OS X, Windows, and Linux (Note: This is one in a series of articles about various problems we've encountered installing and using Java and Flash under Mac OS X. Also, many parts of these instructions and other related instructions are duplicated from our previous how-to articles.) Summary of Oracle's restrictions The Restrictions below explain what you cannot do with Java and Flash on Mac OS X, Windows, and Linux. You may see some of these restrictions in the output of "java.exe -version", "plugin name", etc., where "plugin name" stands for either "Java Plug-in" or "Shockwave Flash". The restrictions are clearly stated, and we don't feel it's useful to reproduce them verbatim here, but we include them for completeness. In addition, Mac OS X and Linux users should be aware that Java itself now uses the JRE, not the JDK, so the version numbers below may be different from what you'd get when installing the JDK. Mac OS X Java updates are not currently supported Our Java Plug-in ships with the Mac OS X Installer, and updates are not supported. Major changes in the JDK are not supported No updates, upgrades, or changes to the JDK are allowed, because they may require changes in the current version of Java Plug-in. (We will not change JDK versions or upgrade the JDK to a new version.) While we do not recommend installing third-party plug-ins, if you have to use them, be advised that they may interfere with the configuration of your system and with updating Java. System updates and hotfixes are not supported If you need a new update, our recommendation is that you update to the latest version of Java. Java security updates are not supported If you need updates in this area, consider using the browser-based version (see the Security for Apple browsers for details). Some applications may not be installed Some Java applications will not run after a security update. For example, some Java applications do not run with the Java Plug-in after security updates. The following Oracle Java applications are known to have these problems: * netbeans.*: We don
