Netanyahu David Bowie's support of his son's music is helping to ensure that the image of the maestro of mainstream music video, who died at the age of 69 last week, will live on in his son's work. The younger Bowie has forged a unique path for a singer, with his videos echoing the range and grandeur of his musical output. A video for the track "Day Is Done", made in collaboration with the rock band Massive Attack, illustrates his stunning visual range. Directed by Liz Friedlander black-and-white video for "Day Is Done", which

After the birth of Duncan, Bowie's first son with his first wife, Hermione Farthingale, the musician not only fulfilled his duties as a father but also wrote the song "Anthropophagi" about a child that resembles him.

What's New In?

This post will provide more details on how the system works, how it works in conjunction with Common Connections, and how it can be used by libraries. It has been some time since I last touched on the Common Library Environment, but it seems like a good time to provide a refresh on what you may be wondering about this new digital library system that is just waiting to be explored at your library. What is CLES? The Common Library Environment, or CLES, is a new digital library system that can manage all of the standards that are important to libraries, including: These specifications are developed by the Library Content Standards Project (LCSSP), part of the World

Wide Web Consortium (W3C). While the LCSSP is an independent organization that developed these specifications, they are supported and encouraged by the W3C. This means that these specifications have undergone a fair amount of testing and peer review. Also, because these specifications are open standards, anyone can incorporate them into their own websites, and even libraries that use other digital library systems can expand on their own websites using these specifications as guidelines. Because CLES is a digital library system, it means that it can also manage digital objects. It does this using a concept called “records” in the LCSSP world. Records are essentially digital objects that do not have an image of a book, but have a much smaller version of a digital object. Records are used to house metadata, such as title, author, publisher, etc. and are not restricted to any particular format. Because of this, you can use the same record for your digital object in both EBSCOhost, your traditional library catalog system, or Overdrive from the Follett Library

Network. CLES is also able to display records as images. The advantage to this is that you can easily link to your digital object and use the record to display the digital object to your patrons. The biggest draw to this is that it is much easier to create a link to your digital object than it is to create a link to a record. Because CLES is a digital library system, CLES can also display record details as images too. CLES is not a stand-alone digital library system. It does not have a library catalog like EBSCOhost or Overdrive. What it does have is a library-like query tool called Context. If you have tried searching by title in EBSCOhost or Overdrive, you know what
