Reviewing Photoshop's Menu Options You can change Photoshop's default settings by choosing one of the options you see in the menus that appear on the Photoshop workspace when you start the program or load an image. You can also choose different configuration options from the menus in the toolbar along the bottom of the program. The following list includes some of the popular ways to control the settings for the program: Choose Image⇒Preferences from the menu and then select a category from the menu choices that appear on your screen. Each category is labeled with a descriptive title. The table in Figure 5-1 shows what some of the titles are. The Image Options categories offer several very useful features: Cropping: The Image Crop tool enables you to select one or more pieces of your image to separate from the main image. You can also use the rotate and flip tools in this category. Rotate your image 90 degrees and flip it horizontally or vertically and then drag the handles that appear along the corners of your cropped area. Alternatively, you can click the Rotate (circled in Figure 5-1) button in this category and then press the arrow keys to rotate your image. You can lock the rotation in place by pressing the Shift key when you are finished rotating the image. The Resolution And Print Size category contains some useful and handy features for photographers. The Image Size and Resize Tools category settings offer several options to help you size images for printing on your printer. The Printer Settings category includes settings for the size of the prints that you send to the printer and the way they are displayed when you view your images. Q: How to update the text of one cell, and only the text of the cell in one row

How to update the text of one cell, and only the text of the cell in one row. I wanted to update the name, address and phone number of the customer. I have successfully added, edited, deleted and found the records using the query. I just cannot find a method to update only the name, address and phone number for one single cell. i.e. CUST001, Employee Experience, 1252, Holbrook, 4676677887, 1-800-345-4432 I tried faking the name of "CUST001" and hoping that the query will be able to update only the name column, and the name column is empty at the moment. but it didn't update my table. finally, i tried to find a way to update only the cell in the third column of the first row. if the row is 2, and cell number is 1, update the text in the second cell in that row, and only the text in that row. at the moment, my code will update all the cells in that column and the whole row that matched the criteria. any idea how to implement this? tried using the code below to not update any row by using the values of the data type.

String colName = "name"; String colValue = "name"; String cellAddress = "CUST001, Employee Experience, 1252, Holbrook, 4676677887, 1-800-345-4432"; SqlCeCommand command = new SqlCeCommand(@"UPDATE customer SET [name] = @name, address = @address, phone = @phone WHERE ContactID = @Id", sqlConn); command.Parameters.Add("@

Q: WebExtensions addEventListener simple addEventListener What is the proper way to use addEventListener in an HTML Extension web-extension? When I click on the button myExtension.js is loaded, not the fallback. If I use onclick="addEventListener()" it falls back to the fallback page, not the web-extension page. How do I add an EventListener to the current page using a web-extension? My code so far: background.js "use strict"; self.addEventListener("load", function () { self.prompt(); }); function prompt() { return Promise.resolve("some message"); } A: Two things to be clear: a WebExtension must be used in a tab in the WebView, the popup is NOT a web-extension. the "TabContext" object is a local object, it's not relevant for the WebExtension's JS code, see this answer The first thing is easy: on the background page, define a popup variable that will use a WebExtension to call a popup from the popup's own (background) page: "use strict"; function prompt() { return Promise.resolve("some message"); } const popup = window.showModalDialog("The popup", "The popup", "dialog-title"); self.addEventListener("load", function () { self.prompt(); }); The second thing is the background page's popup IS relevant: "use strict"; self.addEventListener("load", function () { const TabContext = { currentWindow: window, currentWebPage: document.currentScript.ownerDocument }; if (typeof popup === "string") { const fullPath = String.raw`data:text/html;base64,${encodeURIComponent(popup)}`; console.log("calling web extension popup with: " + fullPath); return Promise.resolve().then(e => { console.log("adding to the registry
