The water supply, coffee beans, and coffee size all differ from home to home. Brewing coffee is an art that requires experience and practice before you have a successful cup of coffee. So if you're just beginning, don't be discouraged. Just persevere and practice. Following are some tips and suggestions for making a good cup of coffee. ## Understanding the Role of Water Water plays a big role in making a good cup of coffee. The water should be clean and clear, and the coffee should be freshly ground. The grounds should be pulverized to ensure that the coffee is evenly extracted. Too much water will dilute the coffee and send it to waste. To find out how much water you should use, you need to check the target water temperature setting on your machine. This setting determines how hot water will be and thus how much coffee will be extracted at the end of the brewing cycle. Typically, the target water temperature is about 180°F. For stronger coffee, a higher target temperature is recommended. ## Getting Your Ingredients Ready The ingredients for good coffee are fresh beans and purified water. If you're not sure about where to buy coffee beans, stop by a grocery or coffee shop near your home. In many grocery stores, the coffee section offers a wide selection of coffees that are affordable and nice. When you have coffee beans at home, you'll also need a grinder or a similar coffee mill. The easiest way to grind coffee is with a coffee grinder. If you want to use whole beans, use a coffee filter or similar device to strain out the coffee grounds. A coffee filter works great.

Dante was "a top-level urban informant for many years," said Tony Yarosh, chief of police in the city of Flint, MI. "He had a gun out the entire time we were investigating this thing." Yarosh told reporters Dante was a member of the Gangster Disciples, a notorious, violent street gang in Flint. "When we started investigating he became our informant and gave us a lot of information about the guys who were members of these gangs," he explained. Shortly after Dante's arrest, Yarosh met with state police in Detroit to share Dante's information, which led to the bust of the gang members at the three houses. "We've got a couple dozen guys who are members of the Gangster Disciples," Yarosh said. "They call themselves a 'dynasty' because they've been in the game so long." The police say the three houses were used to distribute drugs and act as a base of operation for the gang. Dante was the confidential informant who provided the information that led to the arrests, not the police who found and arrested the gang members at the three houses. A report released Tuesday by the Michigan State Police revealed that Dante led them to these locations, and he was therefore the actual investigator who found the drugs. "Obviously Mr. Dante was never in charge of investigating this case," Lance Cpl. Joseph Shaw told me on Monday. "He played a very important role in the case. I mean, without him, we wouldn't have been there." Dante was very reluctant to talk to the press or even to reveal where he lived. He declined to comment on this story because he was "just a regular guy." "The idea that something like this might happen to a person is something that really bothers me," Dante said. "I'm not going to say my life is being ruined because I don't want to seem like I'm complaining, but it's just sad." But Dante was not willing to sacrifice his life for this case. "If I start talking to them and let this get out, the last thing I want to do is end up like my friend," he said. "When we started investigating he became our informant and gave us a lot of information about the guys who were members of these gangs." Yarosh: L
