Although the immunosuppressive agent rapamycin has been shown to inhibit the release of cytokines from monocytes, its mechanism of action at this level is not completely understood. In the present study, we investigated the mechanism by which rapamycin inhibits the release of the inflammatory cytokine IL-1 beta from human monocytes. Rapamycin inhibited IL-1 beta release with an IC50 of 0.2-0.5 microM after a 4-h culture. Its effect was blocked by overexpression of calcineurin but not by FK506, suggesting that calcineurin is the target of rapamycin in these cells. On the other hand, cyclosporin A at a concentration that blocked IL-1 beta release from these cells inhibited the ability of rapamycin to inhibit IL-1 beta release. These data indicate that rapamycin inhibits IL-1 beta release from monocytes by at least two distinct mechanisms, calcineurin inhibition and inhibition of the activation of nuclear factor of activated T cells.Q: Как программно изменить значение ViewPager у четырёх пунктов?
