The "HyperMotion" engine is also used to power FIFA Ultimate Team, which combines authentic teams from around the globe with real-life players, and for the new all-new, subscription-based My Teams feature. In addition to the new motion capture engine, FIFA 22 introduces new animation updates including improved running animations, and new balance animation improvements for players who run with the ball. Physical player collisions in-game now match the speed and motion of real-world collisions. Players can now move with an authentic, natural, and powerful "true-to-life" animation. If a player misses a tackle, for example, and the ball is pushed forward to them, they will correct their motion towards the ball, allowing them to make a more powerful tackle. This new animation system also allows for realistic footwork, enabling players to take advantage of space in and around the opposition, making dribbling, passing and shooting more effective. There's also been a major overhaul to the dynamic artificial intelligence of your teammates. AI teammates now react like real humans and can make more realistic on-ball actions that are linked directly to their full-body movement. Also, players now react to pressure in and around the opposition with intelligent tugs and pinches on the ball, forcing defenders out of position and driving them into mistakes. FIFA 22 also introduces new tools and features to help players keep track of their performance. After a match, players can see their Shots Attempted, Shots on Target, Shots on Net, and Shots Over Limitations statistics, as well as details about Shots Created, Assists, Assists Created, Goals and Match Ratings. FIFA Ultimate Team now has Overlay for over 1,300 players in the game. With this new tool, you can study any player's strengths and weaknesses, use their value to create your own teams, or share them via the new transfer market system. When a player is on the ball, you'll see information such as a player's Body, Head and Arms zones, what actions they're likely to perform, and their pass and shoot accuracy percentage. You can use this information to identify which players to include in your team or to create your own custom team. When a player is not on the ball, you'll see information about his Actions and GK Reactionz Ratings. This is useful in building a complete roster, as
