[(Google Play)Transforming the Trauma Working Space: Combining the Efficacy of the ASIST with the ASISC Model of Assessment. Transforming the Trauma Working Space (TTS) is an introductory training program for active-duty military medics working with trauma patients. The goal is to enhance the psychological trauma assessment of those patients, implement the American Academy of Sleep Medicine Trauma Screening Criteria (ASIST), and provide guidelines for proper management of their injuries. The purpose of this study is to show the efficacy of the TTS, and specifically the application of the ASIST. A pre- and post-intervention, randomized, blinded assessment was completed on 100 military medics. The pre-intervention assessment was based on a survey sent to the assessors. The post-intervention assessment was completed by the same individuals based on their responses to the survey and their administrative feedback. The study had a follow-up phone call to an assessor who was not involved with the trauma assessment that included questionnaires. An additional 16 participants had an interview by telephone after the TTS. The average pretest scores were significantly higher than post-test scores, and there was a significant difference between average test scores of the pretest and post-test questionnaires. The majority of the participants had a significant difference in scores on the ASIST between pretest and post-test scores and felt they were more psychologically prepared to handle a trauma patient (43% and 43%, respectively). The findings of this study validate the efficacy of the TTS, as well as the implementation of the ASIST.Q: Is there a way to add the same color to all the buttons in the app Is there a way to assign a same color for all the buttons in the app in Android?
