The video for Unstable is the longest yet, clocking in at 54 minutes. Not only does this put her on a new level of fame, it also delivers several new challenges. For a start, 54 minutes is a long time to keep people's attention. In a Facebook video posted this week, JPEGMAFIA talks about the unique recording problems the long-form video brings. She also describes a number of the recording problems, including a series of vocal prompts in the middle that caused the rest of the song's music to stop. The vocal prompts are basically quiet snippets of the song being sung in her mind. "About seven minutes in, the first vocal, I thought I heard something in the vocalist's head or something, I couldn't tell what it was so I started
