Our group has recently generated Brain Derived Neurotrophic Factor (BDNF) deficient mice. We show here that these mice display significant defects in the olfactory bulb circuitry. The morphology of the mitral cell layers and the glomerular layer were both significantly affected, and our results show a higher degree of apoptosis of the olfactory receptor neurons in the BDNF deficient mice. In this study, we further investigate the hypothesis that BDNF is responsible, at least in part, for the morphological defects of the olfactory bulb. We also aimed to investigate if different BDNF expressing cells may explain the variable levels of loss of receptor neurons in BDNF deficient mice. The expression of BDNF was investigated in three different cell types: the glial cells, the olfactory receptor neurons and the olfactory sensory neurons. Our data indicate that the olfactory sensory neurons do not express BDNF, while the glial cells and the olfactory receptor neurons do express significant levels of the neurotrophin. Our study is the first to demonstrate the spatial and temporal expression of BDNF in the olfactory system of mice. The results show that the expression of BDNF is restricted to the glial cells, the olfactory receptor neurons and the olfactory sensory neurons. Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) is among the leading causes of chronic morbidity and mortality worldwide. COPD is characterized by chronic lung inflammation and progressive airflow obstruction. A major component of the inflammation and airflow obstruction is an increase in the thickness of the smooth muscle layer of the airways. The Hetalia Song English Translation - by overbudget. Earlier in the story I'd suggested that a better tactic might be to pretend that it wasn't even the real Hetalia. Alternatively, back up with a legitimate sounding reason. I'm also glad it seems to have stuck, mainly because it didn't really look or sound like anyone was paying attention to it.
