The latest cruise ship burn and scandal to hit the media in recent days involves the Russian cruise line "MegaYachts." On Wednesday, a Russian high seas adventure tour operator admitted to intentionally setting fire to a boat that had stopped at the popular Indonesian island of Bali on Sunday. A spokesman from "MegaYachts" told Reuters that the incident was reported to local authorities on Monday. The spokesman did not explain the reasons why. The head of Mega Yachts, Valery Brudno, said that the fire was set while the ship was in Balinese waters because the captain wanted to test its firefighting and extinguishing capabilities. The fire started on the ship early on Sunday morning and the captain of the ship apparently abandoned ship. Local media reported that the ship sustained only minor damage but the captain, sailor, and a passenger all suffered minor smoke inhalation. Local media reported that the ship sustained only minor damage but the captain, sailor, and a passenger all suffered minor smoke inhalation. A passenger recorded the accident on his mobile phone and the video was widely circulated in Russian media on Monday. As yet, no one has been arrested or charged. The crew's contract was terminated and the ship was being taken to a port in Uzbekistan. Mega Yachts even posted a photo of the "suicide" on their Facebook page. "In the heat of battle, the captain decided to set the ship alight," they wrote. "The versel has sustained some minor damage and we have been taken to an available port." "The fire was set while the versel was in Indonesian waters." Hollywood's Burn-and-Scandal-Industry What's so interesting about this incident is that unlike the other cruise ship burnings this year the European and Asian routes as well.

Superheroes have become the most common type of fantasy in today's society. The technique of representation involves the generation of fantasy through screens. Super hero can be defined as a hero of human beings who has extraordinary supernatural powers and don't have a set of attributes, such as power, action or exceptional skills. The idea of a superhero emerged in the mind of a Scottish novelist called Frank who imagined an award-winning book called "The Scottish Fairy Book". This was a significant inspiration for Charles Dickens and his comic hero, Jack, would eventually appear in his stories. People are interested in comic and superhero elements because they are unique and they express their feelings in a way that they cannot do in a realistic approach. Another advantage of using the comic elements is the fact that a common man can relate to them to an extent that no one else can. Super hero movies are dominated by the comic or cartoon approach. In a superhero film, the action scenes become the major attraction factor. Actors like Tom Cruise, Arnold Schwarzeneggar, Bruce Willis, Will Smith and Angelina Jolie have created a special position in the world of super heroes. That is why movies like "Superman Returns", "Spiderman", "Batman and Robin" and "X-men" are widely popular among movie-goers. In recent years, the American comic book industry has been transformed. The use of the comic book have increased exponentially and is now used to an extensive degree. This documentary by a film student describes the evolution of the comic book and its emergence in the American population. Successful films like "Independence Day" have made it to the box office crowds. Many other superhero movies have been made with the help of the technology. Now they are projected in high definition with the help of advanced technology. There
