5 Reasons to Use Photoshop Elements A Reason While Photoshop may have an overwhelming amount of features, Photoshop Elements offers a modest set of useful features and tools. It's good to have more than one tool at your disposal.

1. It's Easy The interface is very simple. There is no complicated menu bar, you just click on what you want to do. This makes it easier to use for beginners and easier to get used to for seasoned users.
2. It's Good Enough As well as being easy to use, Photoshop Elements also performs well. It is a respectable graphics editor and works well with the basic features found in the other Adobe apps.
3. It's Affordable You can use Photoshop Elements to edit photos for free, without the need to pay for any additional programs.
4. It's Affordable While the learning curve might seem daunting, Photoshop Elements is designed to be easy to understand and use. Q: How to reliably find a PID in C? I'm running a process on Linux that takes anywhere from 5 to 10 minutes to complete. I would like to be able to figure out when it's finished so I can add another task. The problem is that I've learned that I can't actually check for the exit status of the program because it doesn't have one. I found that on the OS X version it works by doing the following: `NSProcessInfo* processInfo = [NSProcessInfo processInfo]; [[processInfo process] kill]; [[processInfo process] terminate];` // time it out, since in this case we are trying to wait for a child process to terminate if (`[[NSProcessInfo processInfo] processName] != @"childProcessName"`) { if (`[[NSProcessInfo processInfo] terminationTime]`) // Do stuff } This works but it seems like a hack. I looked at this question: "How to check if a process is running?" and tried using the `NSProcessInfo` class and terminating that process using `[[[NSProcessInfo processInfo] process] terminate];` but the program always crashes. Shouldn't the `[NSProcessInfo process]` return a reference to the process in question? A: The method `kill` does not remove the process from the running processes' table. You'll have to clear the process object from the `NSProcessInfo.process` array to release the reference if you wish to prevent it from "accidentally" re-spawning. The easiest way to do that is to keep an array of the existing processes and then loop through them until you find the one you want: `NSMutableArray runningPids = [NSMutableArray array];` // Find existing processes for (`NSProcessInfo pid in [[[NSProcessInfo processInfo] process] processes]`) { if (`[[NSProcessInfo processInfo] processName] != [pid processName]`) continue; `[runningPids addObject:pid];` } if (`[runningPids count] > 0`) { // Remove the references to the processes for (`NSUInteger i=0; i`
