The present disclosure relates to electrical stimulation devices and to methods of manufacturing and using such devices. Electrical stimulation of the brain and other tissues can be effective in treating a variety of physiological conditions. Such stimulation can be applied to restore function to, otherwise, paralyzed or non-functioning tissues, or to tissues which are already functional. One example of the latter is deep brain stimulation, or DBS. Electrical stimulation can be applied by surgically implanting electrodes within a patient's brain tissue or within the central, peripheral or sympathetic nervous systems to improve or affect the patient's health. In many cases, the implantable device comprises one or more electrodes which are coupled to a pulse generator or other suitable electrical circuitry. The stimulation performed by an electrical stimulator depends, at least in part, on the placement of the electrodes within the tissue. For example, electrical pulses may be applied to the vagus nerve for the purpose of treating heart failure. As the vagus nerve is distributed throughout the body, it is essential that such therapy be precisely applied to the nerve in order to achieve maximum therapeutic effect. In order to implant electrodes for deep brain stimulation, stereotactic methods are typically used. Several types of implants are used to surgically implant electrodes and the corresponding circuitry.
