Scrutiny Premium Crack Mac Full Version DownloadImage copyright Getty Images Home security giants Ring and ADT have issued new systems to help emergency workers find where they are in an emergency. Ring, an Amazon-owned firm, said Ring Connect uses data to find users in a disaster zone. The company's ADT Connect builds on existing technology that gives customers the ability to send messages from their phones via text, email or phone calls. Emergency workers can receive location-based alerts and calls on their phones, allowing them to coordinate efforts. The programme requires a mobile phone to work, though the company said it would work with carriers to allow other services to be set up. The scheme also works in areas that do not have full mobile internet coverage.

Ring said that all of the alerts were delivered to the customer's phone via an information management system that connected with ADT's existing alert service and helped authorities to work out where the user was. Image copyright Getty Images "In a natural disaster, the 911 system is the first, and most important, line of defense in ensuring the safety and wellbeing of individuals, families and communities," said Ring's chief executive Erik Huggers. "Our Ring Connect solution helps mobilize emergency response teams with up-to-date information on shelter locations, potentially saving lives and making a significant difference for people affected by emergency situations." Image copyright Getty Images The technology is designed to allow officials to pinpoint the emergency location based on the subscriber's phone's location. Ring said it has worked with local emergency management teams to develop the technology. "We're very focused on helping police and first responders, and we look to our local partners to bring more capabilities to the table," said Nathan Ellis, executive director of products at Ring.
