Pixelmator is a barebones vector image editor for Mac OS X and Windows. It has features similar to Photoshop, like layers, composite and filters. As its name suggests, Pixelmator features simple, pixel-based graphics. But, it also provides useful editing tools to help you create elaborate drawings, logos, or spot illustrations. It doesn't have all of the features of Photoshop, but it does provide basic editing functions. It also offers integration with Apple's Pages, Keynote, and Numbers programs and provides basic color correction. Krita is a professional graphics editor for the Linux platform. It offers extensive layers and image tools similar to traditional photography editing software. It uses vector graphics to create drawings and illustrations, which makes it a good alternative for animators and illustrators. It's similar in many ways to Pixelmator and allows you to export images as several different formats like jpeg, pdf, or svg.

There are a number of useful additional tools, like filters, adding texts, and basic image editing features. Q: In Xcode, how can I tell which files (in a Cocoa application) are executable? I know what a linker can do, but I want to know how to do this using the Xcode GUI - or, at the very least, by setting breakpoints. I know that in my Xcode project I have an "Info.plist" but this seems to only contain XML data. Also, I know that I can use the "Info" file to set breakpoints - but that doesn't help me figure out what is executable. (I have no problem setting breakpoints using my favorite text editor, but would like to do it using the Xcode GUI if at all possible.) A: The linker doesn't just link the executable. Linking the binary after the linker phase means that the linker can't know whether or not the binary should be binary executable. The linker can tell whether or not the binary is a library, but can't tell whether or not a library should be executable, because it doesn't know what libraries the binary will reference. This application claims the priority of 199 55 726.0, filed Nov. 18, 1999, the disclosure of which is expressly incorporated by reference herein. The present invention relates to a motor vehicle having a drive and having at least one cargo compartment which can be closed off by at least one sliding roof. The motor vehicle has a drive which is powered by an internal combustion engine having a crankcase with a drive shaft to which at least one crankcase bearing is assigned. At least one auxiliary drive of the vehicle is also assigned to the drive shaft. A motor vehicle of this type is known from German Patent Document DE 195 17 366 A1. The drive shaft is driven by an internal combustion engine and the transmission shaft is accommodated in a crankcase. The crankcase has at least one crankcase bearing which is assigned to the drive shaft. The auxiliary drive can be assigned to the drive shaft or to the transmission shaft. An object of the present invention is to improve the stability in the closed position of the sliding roof. This and other objects are achieved by a motor vehicle having a drive and having at least one cargo compartment which can be closed off by at least one sliding roof, in which at least one auxiliary drive of the vehicle is assigned to the drive shaft. This design provides an auxiliary drive in the crankcase which is assigned to the drive shaft

[[@B15]]. Staining of the lymphocyte cell surface markers showed that all of the cells were CD3⁺CD8⁻CD4⁻. However, the expression of CD2 was decreased in the CLN-treated mice as compared with the control. The CD3⁺CD4⁺CD8⁻ subsets can be divided into four subsets, including CD4⁺CD8⁺, CD4⁺CD8⁻, CD4⁻CD8⁺, and CD4⁻CD8⁻[[@B21]]. The proportion of CD4⁺CD8⁺ T-cells in the total CD3⁺CD8⁺ subset was decreased in the CLN-treated mice. In contrast, the proportions of the CD4⁺CD8⁻ and CD4⁻CD8⁺ subsets in the total CD3⁺CD8⁺ T-cells were increased in the CLN-treated mice. In addition, the expression of CD8 α was decreased in the CLN-treated mice compared with the control. These data showed that the combination of PPD and the vaccines eliminated most of the mycobacteria and shifted the T-cell subsets from a Th1 to a Th2 response in the CLN. In conclusion, the combination of the vaccines and PPD led to a major improvement in the control of the Mtb infection in the lungs, spleen, and CLN. The infected mice showed much less granuloma inflammation and a major shift in the T-cell subsets in the CLN. This study suggests that the combination of the vaccine and the PPD could be a promising strategy for the control of Mtb infection in the lungs, spleen, and CLN.
