In this article, we will look at the top 23 Photoshop Elements plugins to enhance the image editing process. 1. Paper Tools Paper Tools is an image editor extension that edits images one layer at a time. It enables you to easily add special effects, advanced features, and tools such as filters, zoom, and cropping. It lets you choose from a variety of filters that apply to your entire image or selected parts of it. You can also add various special effects or blend modes, and you can even apply your choice of brushes as the finishing touches. Paper Tools features a handy image filter interface, which lets you freely choose the desired filter effects. You can apply them selectively to only those parts of your image that require special attention. 2. Filters This plugin is for Photoshop Elements users. It offers a variety of interesting tools to edit your images. Image-to-Sketch Image-to-Sketch allows you to quickly transform any image into a cartoon-like sketch. This plugin has a set of filters that can be applied to a photo. Once a photo is placed in the plugin and the color scheme is chosen, the artist can then select one of the filters to use for the finishing touches. The plugin gives you a series of options to choose a cartoon-like effect or a vibrant one. In the final step, the program lets you choose the sketch-style thumbnail you want to apply to the photo. Cropper Cropper is a plugin that allows you to quickly crop images from a variety of sources. This Photoshop Elements plugin has very easy-to-use interface that let you crop images with just a few mouse clicks. Users also have the option to do a lot more on a image using various other tools like: Cutaway, Magic Wand, Eraser, and Spot Healing. Some of these tools are pre-installed in the free version. 3. For 45 days before the November election, NPR's new poll tracker, Real Clear Politics' Debate Tracker, will rank the presidential candidates according to a polling average. Today, we update the polls to reflect performances from Thursday's debates and other major events. Who's ahead in the polls? In the Real Clear Politics average, Mitt Romney's lead has expanded from 3.3 points to 5.6 points over President Obama. (Romney is actually 5 points up in this graph, but the five-point spread is obscured by the data window.) Before tonight, the margin had narrowed four times since the second debate, when Romney's big bounce stalled out. Still, it was four points on the last day of October, before Romney lost Wisconsin and a couple days before the third debate. The evolving polling average Gross variables The Real Clear Politics debate tracker polls according to an average of all polls listed on the RCP website. In addition to the average, it shows the number of times a candidate has led, the number of times he has been tied, and the margin, which is the average of all polls that have Obama leading by at least 2 points. For example, Obama leads by 2.4 points on average, but is tied in two separate polls. The biggest change is that Romney gained two points on average after tonight's debate, but the loss in Wisconsin has weakened his position. After last week's debate, Romney trailed by 3.3 points on average. But is he really all that much stronger in the polls? A closer look at the data shows he didn't get a big bounce. Instead, he's been closer to where he started, though it's true that after last week's debate, he was down just 2.6 points on average. (The margin this week is not all that different from the margin before the debate.) Though he's been closer to where he started this week, his margin is still quite large — it's the largest for any candidate on the tracker this week. Also, the polls have been fairly steady, with only a slight increase in the last two days. Most states All but three states have been in the margin. But if you look at the states, the margins tend to be small. The states that have been close are usually pretty close — Alaska and North Carolina are the only two that are more than 4 points apart. The margin in the states Obama won in the last

EAD. A growing number of veterans of the struggle have declared their support for the BPD over the years, most notably the following: * "BPD is the only force that gives a damn." -CPD Chief * "They're like the Mafia." -MPD Chief * "Like a new War on Drugs that actually works." -AIM Commander Also, by 2003 it was apparent to even the most ignorant observer that the "regulars" were not happy with the regime, what with the under-aged hooligans and underage arrests and the emergence of the ghost art crews. In 2007, when the Commission inexplicably decided to cut back on the number of film crews and art crews in an attempt to force the BPD to be more "community-based" and "recession-proof," a growing number of longtime BPD photographers left the department en masse. Because of their dedication to "photography," a growing number of these photographers were hired to shoot for various media outlets. These photographers now collectively make up a small but significant number of the BPD's Photo Film Crew, an elite team of photographers responsible for shooting the majority of BPD videos, public service announcements, and other promotional materials. Despite their numbers, the BPD Film Crew often receive less than a half dozen requests to film each year, most of which come from news outlets (AKA The Powers That Be). This causes the BPD Film Crew to become more infamous than beloved. Unable to secure gigs with Chicago's officialdom, the BPD Film Crew instead produces videos and movies through their own end of the business. The Fuel Underground Film Crew is not managed by the BPD Film Crew. While the BPD Film Crew is primarily a group of veteran photographers, the Fuel Underground Film Crew is primarily a group of high school students, often recruited from the various high schools in Chicago (albeit usually through the Chicago Police Department's Youth Division). The Fuel Underground Film Crew is solely responsible for the videos and movies that appear in the Criminals section of the Chicago Police Department's YouTube channel. The Fuel Underground Film Crew is well-known in the underground filmmaking community and is frequently hired to produce "political" movies that are intended to be used as street propaganda by various gangs. Known by fans to be "fireworks" videos, the Fuel Underground Film Crew's most notorious creation was probably
